Disability Awareness Training

Niagara University Emergency Management Disability Awareness Training received a grant from the Nebraska Developmental Disabilities Council. The program brings together the disability community and those with a role in disaster emergency response with the intent to educate on all matters related to proper response for those with disabilities and access and functional needs.

Designed to address planning, preparedness, response and recovery as it relates to people with disabilities and access and functional needs, NU DAT defines the topic as regulated by the Americans with Disabilities Act and established by FEMA. The program was implemented in New York, with much success, with funding from the New York State Developmental Disabilities Planning Council.

This presentation will introduce you to emergency planning, preparedness, response, and recovery as it relates to people with disabilities and access and functional needs, what it takes to get the whole community approach as a concept, how inclusive planning and active participation are applied, and what your role is in advancing the cause.
